Ferrum Junior College

With the appointment of the Rev. Gene R. Holdredge as head of the department of town and country studies, President C. Ralph Arthur, of Ferrum Junior College announces the completion of one phase of the expansion program to strengthen vocational studies at Ferrum. In that department courses in rural sociology, rural church administration, community development, and leadership for rural life, will be offered in addition to the introductory and advanced courses in home economics and agriculture.

Mr. Holdredge is especially qualified for this position, having won for Tennessee last year the annual "Minister of the Year" award sponsored by the "Progressive Farmer" and administred through Emory University. This award is given to a minister in each of the seventeen southern states who has done the most outstanding work in the rural areas. His church also at the same time received the 'Church of the Year" award.

The new department head is a native of Knox County, Tenn., a graduate of the University of Tennessee. He received the bachelor of divinity degree from the Yale Divinity School and has taken graduate studies at Temple University and the Candler School of Theology at Emory University.

EXCELLENT FISHING IN NAGS HEAD AREA

Manteo, N. C.- Most unusual fish to be taken anywhere along the American coast are caught with rod and reel off the coast of Dare County each summer.

Most outstanding catch of the current season was a 170 pound yellow fin tuna which almost equalled the weight of the world's record taken off the Hawaiian Islands a few years ago. The world's record for this species of one of the fightingest fish taken with rod and reel anywhere was 235 pounds.

Already this year a 442 pound blue marlin has been landed off the Dare coast near Manteo and Hatteras by an angler fishing with rod and reel. This was a big fish, but it was small compared to the world's record for the species taken last year in the same waters by an angler fishing off Cape Hatteras, which scaled at 570 pounds.

The largest channel bass taken with rod and reel this year was a 570½ pounder landed in the surf last Saturday by an angler who had never before caught one of these copper fighters. The big channel bass taken on Saturday was one pound heavier than the largest of its species taken anywhere in the world during 1953.

Anglers fishing the Inlets of the Dare coast this year, namely, Oregon and Hatteras Inlets,have caught bluefish weighing up to three pounds and Spanish mackerel up to seven pounds.

Most colorful fishing along the Dare Coast this year and any year are the species taken in the Gulf Stream off Oregon and Hatteras Inlets. Already this year in addition to blue marlin, sailfish, white marlin, cabio, dolphin, amberjack, albacore and red snapper have been landed.

Before work could begin on the present granite Capitol in Austin, Texas, the Legislature set aside three million acres of land, located in the Texas Panhandle, to finance it.
